A Glimpse of Heaven

"Sometimes, when the light is just right, you can see a glimpse of heaven, just on the other side of this reality. That happened to me only yesterday, driving slowly through the buttery light of late afternoon, beside a stand of trees so old they seemed like gnarled fingers and a lake so still it had fallen asleep. A lone fisherman stood motionless in silhouette as if he were a painted figure, looking out into the endless Oklahoma sky.

Heaven is near, I thought, so near you can almost see it. And I prayed thanksgiving from myself, from us all, to claim this vision as a sign: the beauty of life will not be taken, not by the sadness of these jealous days, but will return to us in all of its healing power, so near in fact that you can almost see it, sometimes, on a late afternoon, when the light is just right."

~ The Rt. Rev. Steven Charleston
